

TATTOO AFTERCARE

On completion, your tattoo will be covered with an appropriate cream and plastic cling wrap. Sometime within the first two hours, remove the plastic wrap, and wash the tattoo carefully with a mild soap. Ensure that you remove all traces of blood and cream from the tattoo site to allow it to heal well. Gently dry the area with a clean towel, or paper towel, and allow it to dry for another ten minutes before reapplying your cream, so as not to trap any excess moisture beneath the cream.

Re-wrap the tattoo site with plastic wrap, and tape into place with medical tape. This will trick the body into believing there is already a scab over the area, and therefore accelerate the healing process. It will also remove the risk of topical infection.

Treat the cling wrap as you would the dressing on a wound, and change it at least twice a day when you shower. After two days/three nights, you will no longer require the cling wrap. Continue with the cream for the duration of a two week period, ensuring that your tattoo never looks dry. Always wash your hands before applying cream to your tattoo.

To avoid any problems during the healing process, make sure your tattoo does not come into contact with dirty surfaces, or other people's bodily fluids.

Do not swim or soak in any kind of water under any circumstances, and keep your showers brief.

Do not expose your tattoo to direct sunlight for two weeks.

After your tattoo is fully healed, if you want to keep it looking great for years to come, never expose it to direct sunlight without sunscreen to protect it.
